Introduction

Go mountain-jumping,
young one.
Go cloudreaching,
puddlestomping
sungrabbing raindrinking seawalking—
if you run around the world,
your sun will never set.

"Uncle George"

Dear Mr. Kloss,

We are in debt.

But before you become worried as you usually do, let us explain that you are the creditor, and we, as a class, are the debtors.

You have given so much more than you've received. Time, energy, worry, your Irish anger at irresponsibility, apathy, and criticism from outside—so much of yourself. And we are helpless.

Can we say thank-you? Can we say you made our class strong, or that our years were better for your guidance, or that we appreciated you more than we can say?

No, it's not enough to repay you, and so we'll remain in debt to you for the rest of our lives. And we won't forget.

Your class,
THE CLASS OF 1968

Appreciation

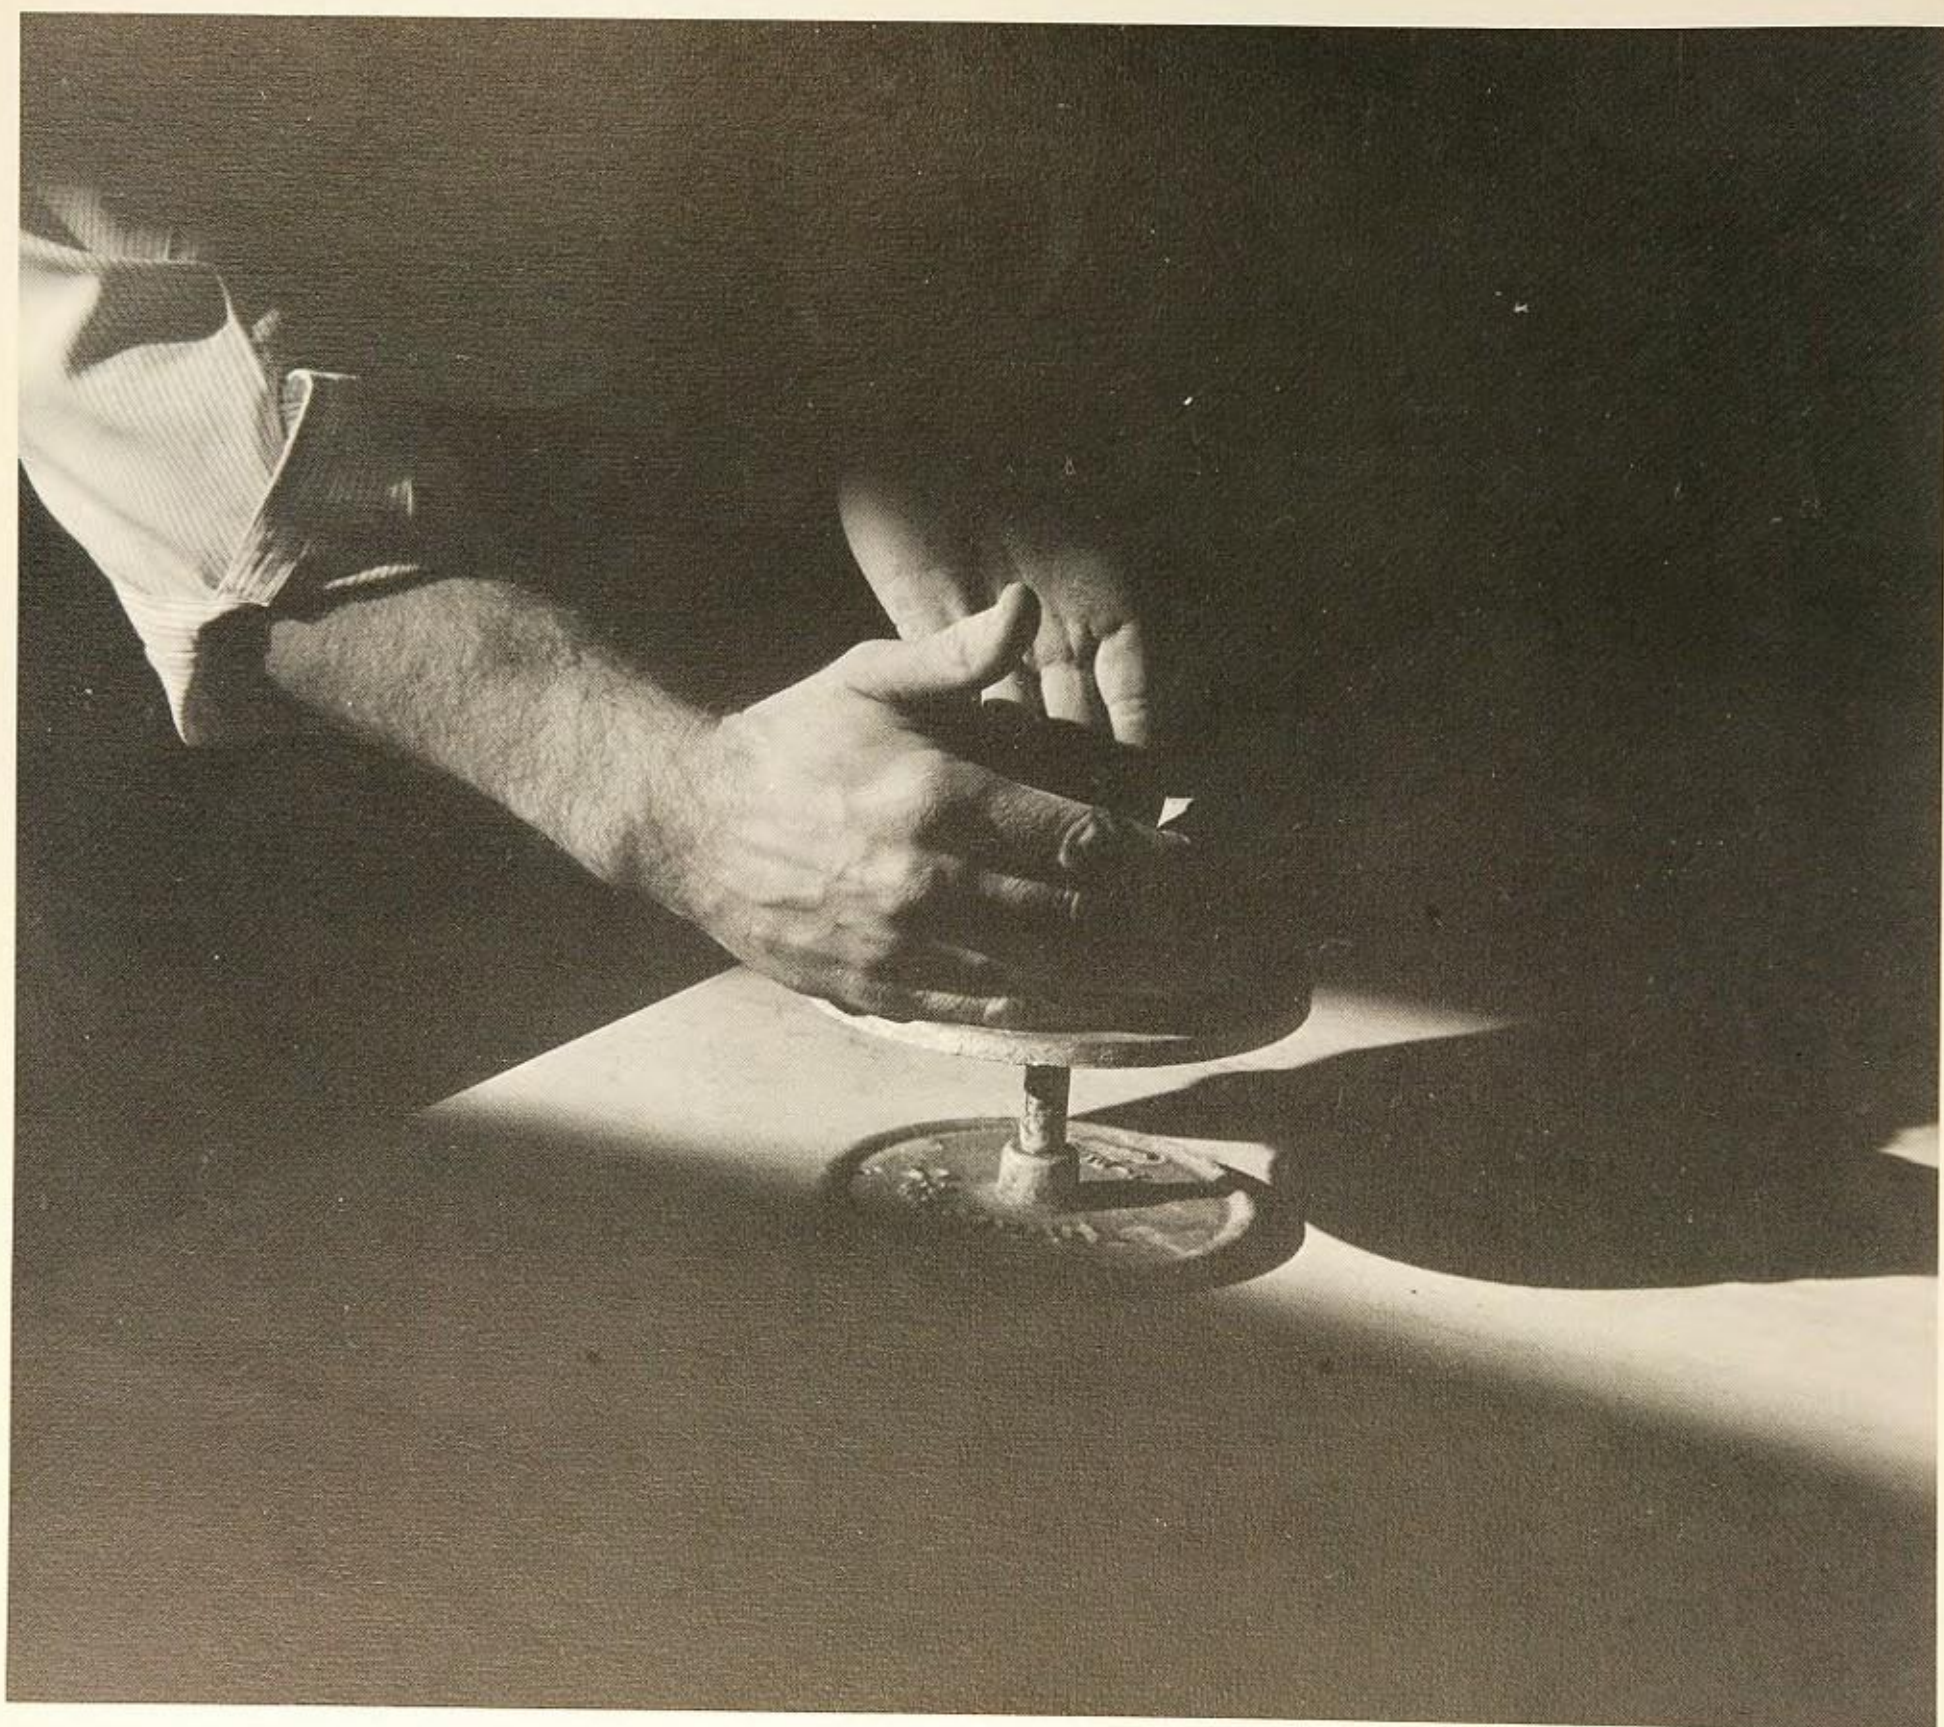

Karen Beatson asks Mr. Kloss for advice

Mr. Kloss gets measured for his cap and gown

Uncle George and his Super Seniors

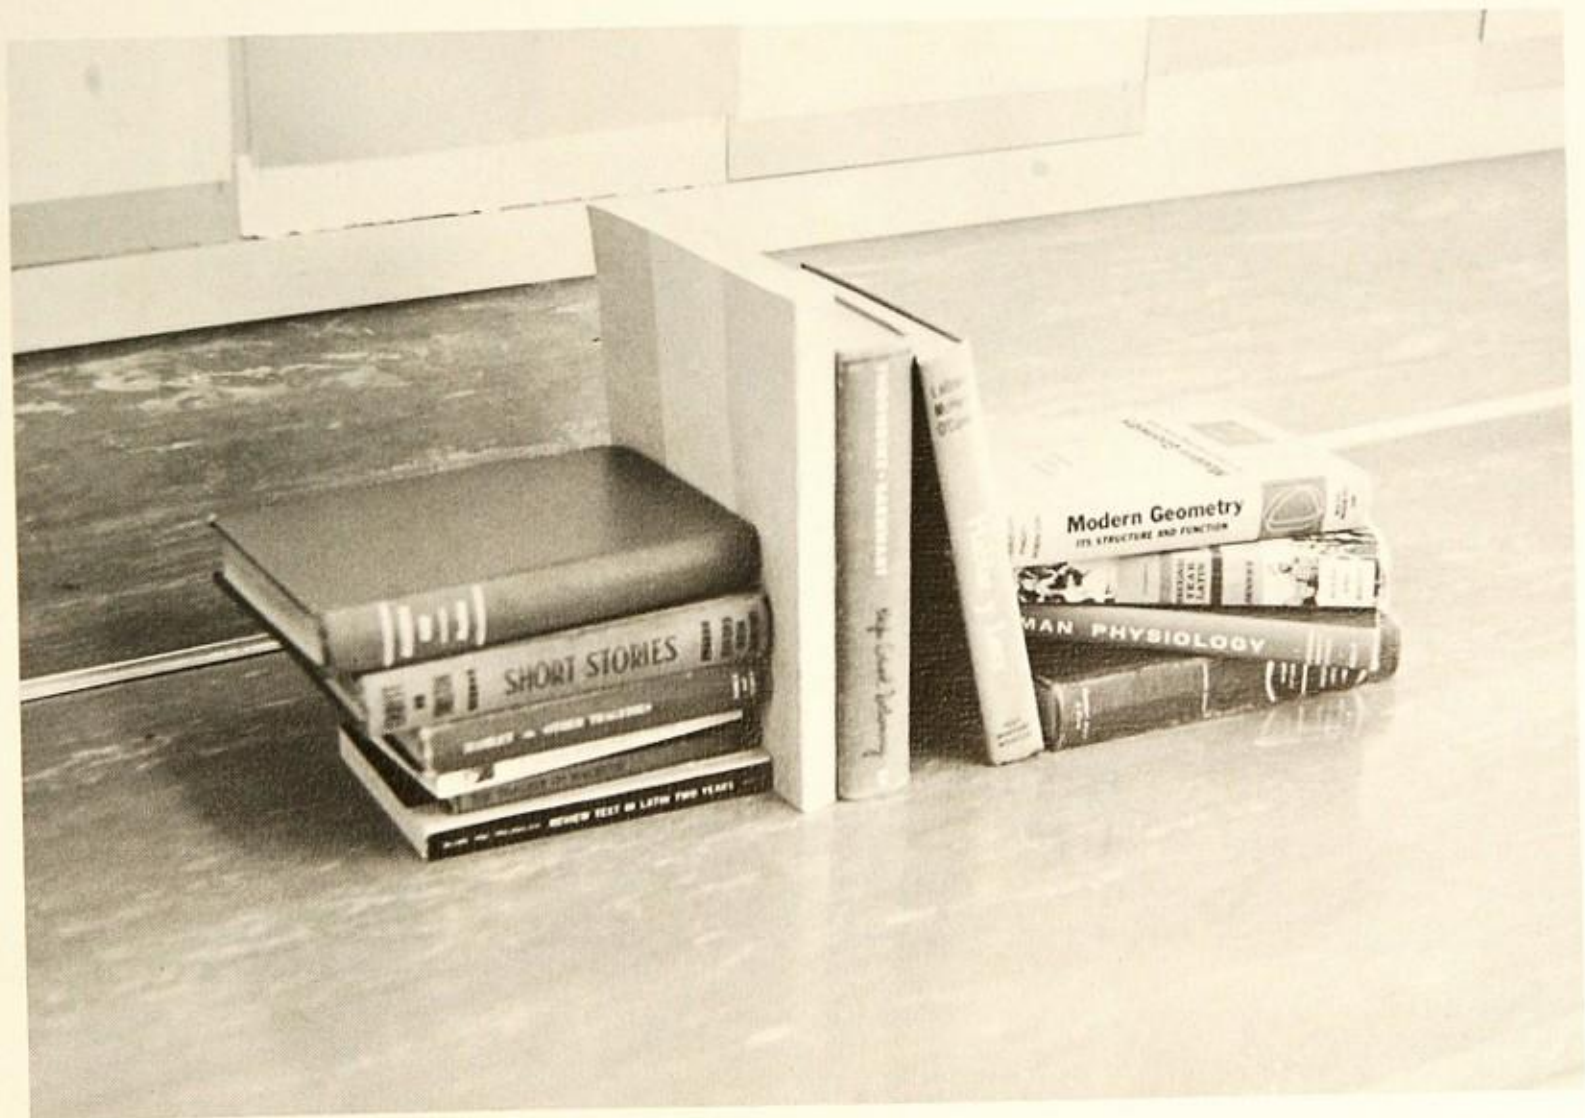

A man can do no more than to teach what he has learned.

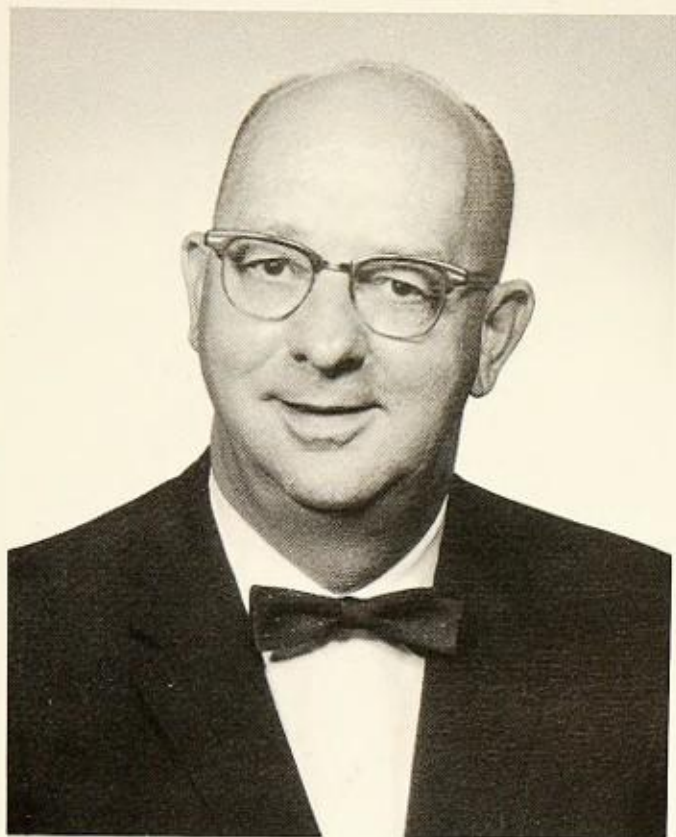

A man can give no gift greater than the wisdom, insight, and knowledge that the experiences of his life have given him.

A man has no responsibility heavier than the weight of three hundred minds, eager to learn, and baffled by a world as yet mysterious.

A man can be no more than this—creator, artist, prophet, wiseman . . . can be no more than a teacher.

My eyes meet yours—
and before their clear purity any degradation that existed before no longer is.

I hear your voices—
your laughter, your tears, your impulsive ragings against the injustices that your elders have learned to accept, and I hear you changing the world by making it live.

I touch your hands—
hands that hold so much of our nation's future in their strong, young grasp.

I know your minds—and I know that you are the salvation of our tired world, because you are youth.

President's Message

Dear Seniors,

It is of the utmost importance that you understand the enormous gratification I have received from serving you. Your progression to a unified body of concerned students would gladden the heart of any president. The enthusiasm and zealous determination of all of you has made our class the greatest ever.

Now that we must terminate our stay at Southington High School and proceed to other institutions, I feel confident that the graduates of the Class of 1968 are capable, dependable, and most of all, worthy of being citizens of our great nation.

As we leave behind the cherished memories of our high school career, we do not have to leave our friends. Let us venture forth with true character, open minds, loving hearts, and outstretched hands to help others.

Truthfully,

DOUGLAS EDWARD MATTAS
President, Class of 1968

Class Poem

A gift.

Wrapped in gold paper
tied with a golden string;
the world was new at its presentation and my soul, alive.

I ran

I danced

I laughed

Years heralded by sunsets and marked by the moon.

A choice.

Crumbled in paradox
lost in the sand;
gray shaded sunsets and goals shrouded in anguish.

I tried

I thought

I grew

Fading rose tints and superimposed creeds.

A fate.

Reclaimed from hope,
viewed from the best angle
the mold was ill-fitting and its bonds eternal.

I wept

I loved

I lived

Tarnished gold paper and frayed golden string.

Barbara Kingsford

A mere chronicle of the events, the ever changing unceasing actions we've performed individually and as a class these past four years, is not enough. Perhaps we'll never be able to say what Southington High School has given or shown to us, but we can try.

The first year for the Class of '68 was difficult, since we were split between two schools, rendering both halves helpless. A semblance of unity was created before the actual feeling of belonging developed. Mr. George Kloss was chosen as advisor, and Gary Bilogna became our first president. Alan Botteon served his term as vice-president, assisted by secretary, Karen Beatson and treasurer, Kathy Polka.

Activities for that year showed the handicap we were working under—the freshmen placed third in both the Magazine Drive and the Talent Show. Our Freshman Dance was held on January 23. Southington High became dimly aware that somewhere a powerful new force was growing, and would soon blossom into a full-fledged class.

Welcoming the other half of our class to Southington High, our sophomore year started happily and vigorously. Gary Bilogna, president, led the class to an astonishing victory in the Talent Show. Top talent included Don Martin, one of our own classmates, who stole the individual first place. Topping the Seniors, and just missing a defeat of the Juniors, the Class of '68 placed second in the Magazine Drive.

The day finally dawned when the young, inexperienced Sophs became upper-classmen. We had changed, we had grown intellectually, physically, and emotionally. We felt so able that our performance in the Magazine Drive was needed to show us the dangers of pride. Failing to make our quota, we humbly accepted the jeers of our arch-rivals, the Seniors, and pointed to our past performance in the Talent Show. This served to silence them adequately, since we had again captured the first place.

Class elections had yielded the following results: Greg Smith as president; Alan Botteon, vice-president; Roger Berube, treasurer; and Mary Giammatteo, secretary. Leaders emerged from our ranks to fill the gaps the graduating class would leave. Unity was an ideal for which we had to strive during of 1968

Under the vigorous, and certainly vociferous leadership of a new president, Doug Mattas, the Class of '68 woke the school up in September, 1967. A hardy crusade to make money led to the great financial success the Seniors gained by selling Blue Knight pins to the student body.

The tremendous surge of school spirit resulted in a first for the High School—each class sold one hundred percent of their tickets for the Talent Show. The Seniors, however, again proved their superiority by winning first place in the talent competition for the third straight year.

The Magazine Drive witnessed a furious scramble for top place, Seniors placing third with an amazing one hundred forty-six percent. We were fully awake and moving.

Leaders for the various Senior activities were chosen. Aleks Miesak and Dave Webster planned the Senior Play. Ed Michalski and Joanne DiNello plotted the Senior Prom, while Ken Paradis worked in conjunction with Adele DellaVecchia on Class Day. John Kukowski and Diana Hubeny planned a fantastic Class Night. Joanne DiNello won the D.A.R. Good Citizen Award.

They were four years of working, laughing, sharing, giving, and receiving. What was given, what was gained—these are questions that can only be answered by our future.

represented the Junior girls.

In a tense race for power at the close of our Junior year, Gary Bilogna, proving the old adage "once a president, always a president" was elected to take Ray Angelo's place as leader of the school. And we joined him.

two years, and the year 1967 revealed its culmination—we began to work together.

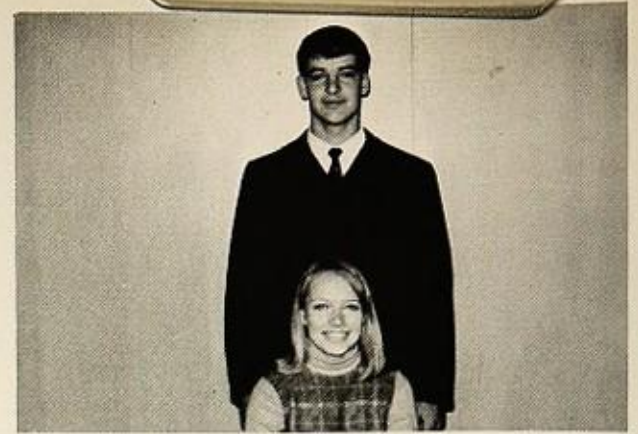

Larry Palazzo and Mary Giammatteo, selected as co-chairmen of the Junior Prom, dreamed up an Oriental fantasy called "Wind Song". The Prom was held at the Ambassador Restaurant, the first SHS prom to be held away from school.

Karen Simone and Roger Berube with Mrs. Patrick's direction staged the incredible Junior Play, "Paint the Town Pink".

Six boys and two girls were selected to attend the 1967 sessions of Nutmeg Boys' and Laurel Girls' State at the University of Connecticut. They were Gary Bilogna, Alan Botteon, Steve Galiette, Greg Smith, Greg Seabury, and John Kukowski for the male elements. Joanne DiNello and Karen Beatson

In my opinion . . .

Paul Greenleaf, acting Fire Chief.

You are the voice in the roar, the face in the crowd, the unit of the mass, the cornerstone, the buttress, the support of the heavy structure.

Younger than some and older than others, you are both the student and the teacher of your peers.

You give, share, aid and follow, soon to become a leader but now being a disciple.

You are the moving force in unity, and the perpetuating stimulus individually.

You, in the brevity of your past and the enormity of your future, are youth.

Class of 1969

Promoted to upperclassman status, the members of the Class of '69 proved themselves capable and enthusiastic by winning second place in both the Talent Show and the Magazine Drive. The Junior Prom, under the supervision of Jean Walstrom and Tom Angelo, was presented on November 18 in the school gym, and was entitled "Fantasy in Frost." Actively serving the rest of the student body with their ambitious projects, the Juniors produced a Junior show, "Through the Ages," the Junior Recital, and a spaghetti supper.

Contestants for the Junior Recital were; Debbie Ciani, Nancy Niemczyski, Bruce Kulmacz, Sharon Gibson, Susan Grosky and Alan Munson.

Class of 1970

When school began in September, the Class of 1970 immediately set out to prove itself as a very strong, united, and enthusiastic class.

Under the direction of co-advisors, Mr. Alphonse D'Angelo and Mr. John Salerno, leaders were elected as follows: Russell Berube, president; Peter Kennedy, vice-president; Mary Ellen Sidorik, secretary; Jean Beatson, treasurer.

The annual Talent Show ended with a Sophomore taking first place, and the Sophomores included in a three-way tie for the selling of tickets. The Magazine Drive showed even greater enthusiasm on the part of the Sophs, who took first place by a large margin.

Always moving ahead, the Sophs became the first class to publish its own newsletter. They also collected pennies daily to add to their treasury.

Virginia Mihalak, a sophomore was chosen first runner-up at the Homecoming, but the Sophs didn't stop there. With continued guidance and unity, they will certainly be able to handle the responsibilities of upper-classmen, and will prove themselves to be tomorrow's leaders.

The anticipation of a contest that will force the last strength from your body;

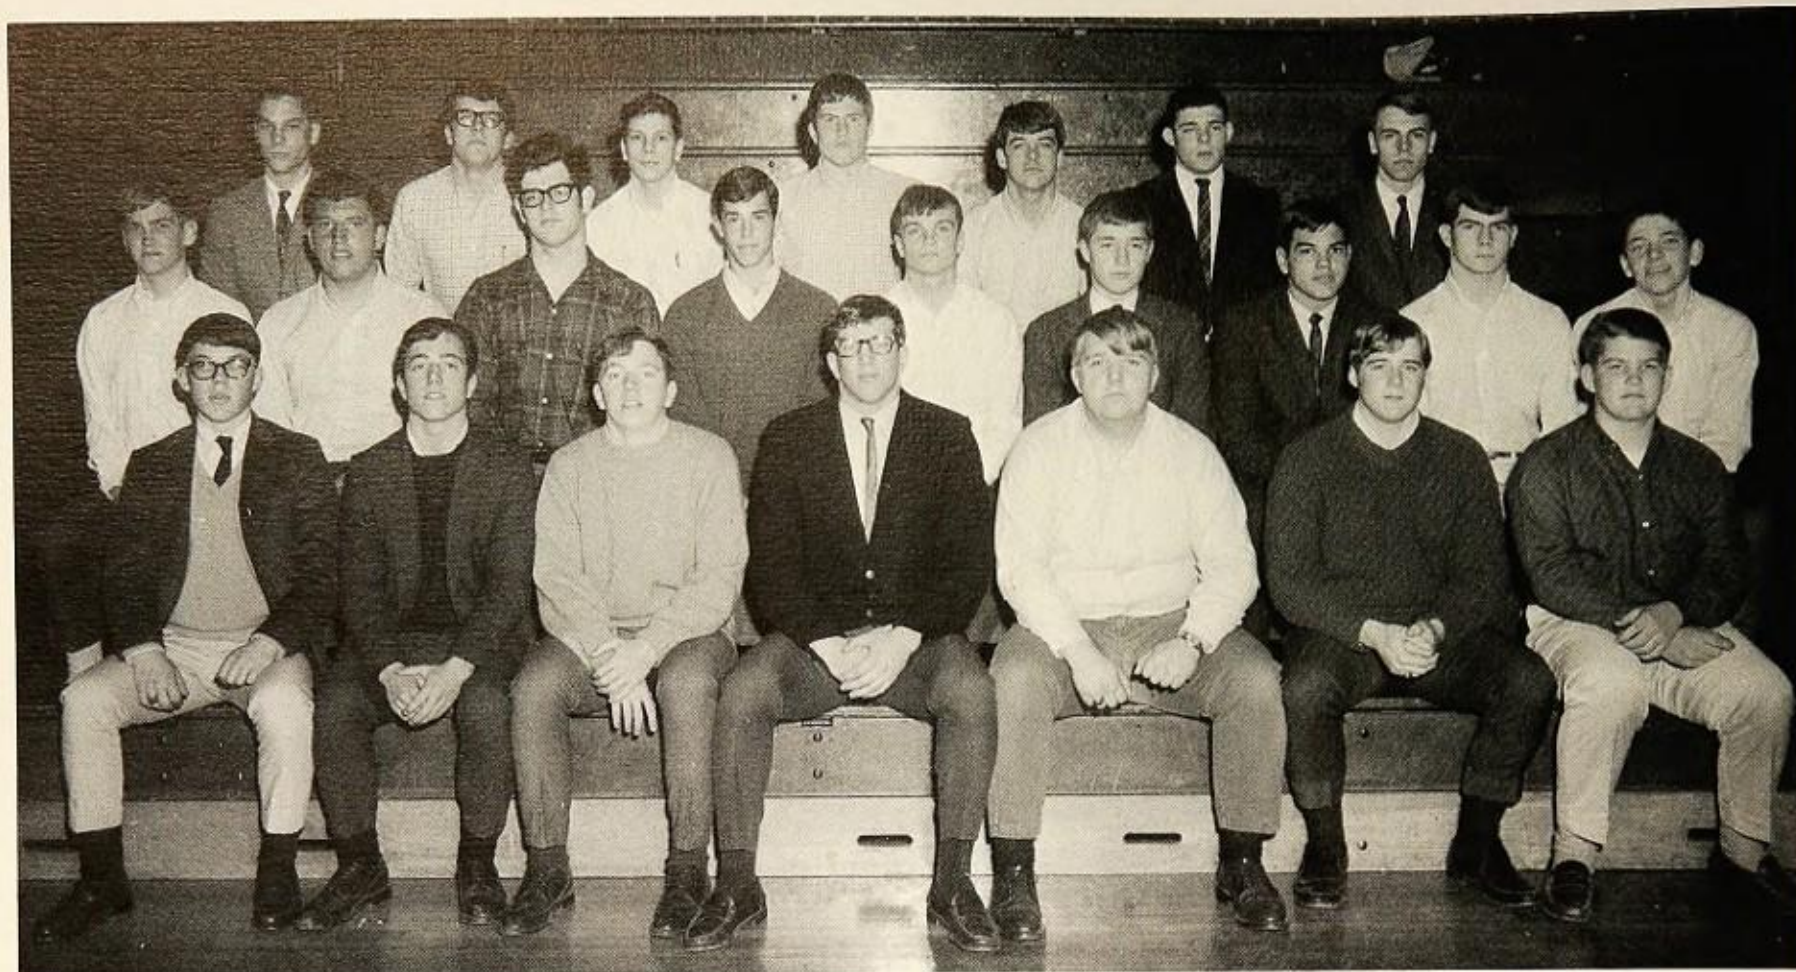

The joy of movement, of power and flexibility, of a strong and supple body;

The triumph of a challenge successfully met and answered, and the exultation in your strength measured against that of another;

The despair of realizing that all you have sometimes isn't enough;

All are known to you—the joy and the sorrow, the triumph and the defeat, for all are part of the world of youth.

Yours is a world of shimmering images, caught in a drop of sun and held for a moment in wondering fingers.

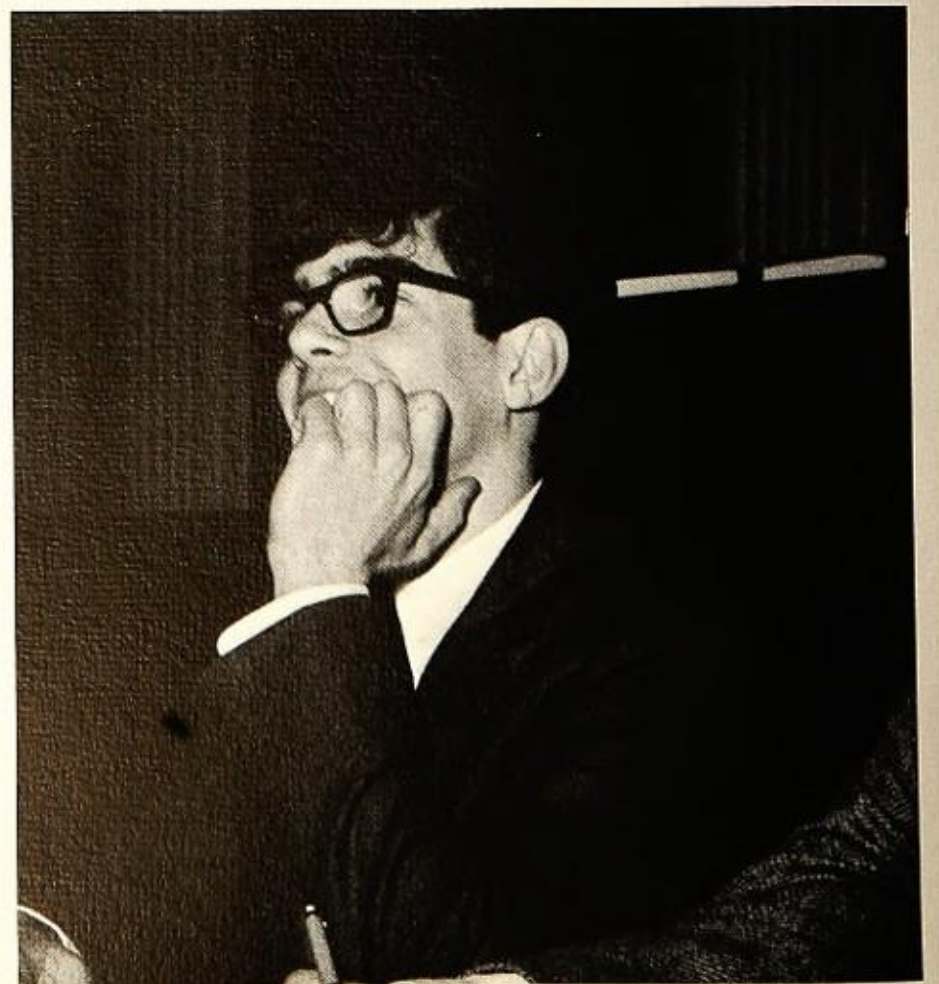

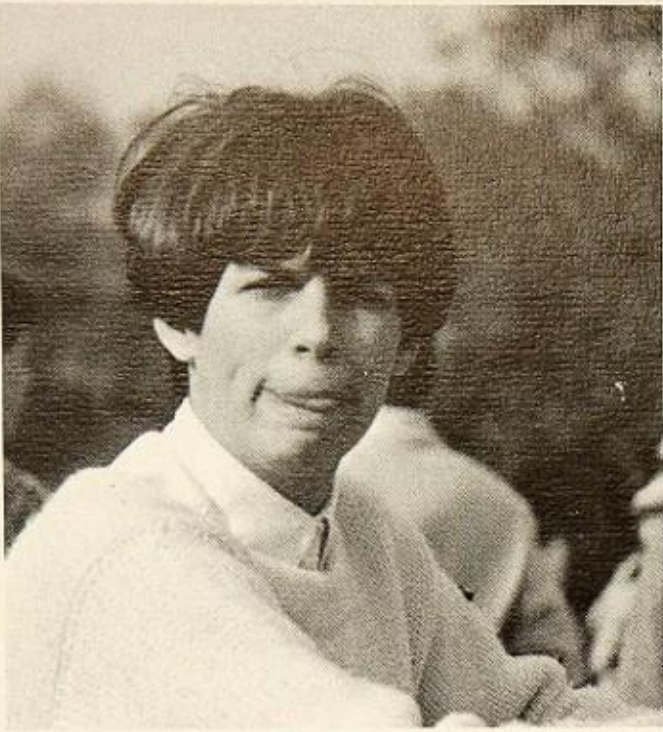

Yours is the world of a changeling where cynical doubts live in proximity to idealistic beliefs, where nymphs and unicorns share space with the hard actualities of war.

Yours is a world of laughter, of springtime, of loving synonymous to living, a gold world, shining and bubblestruck.

Yours is a world without a past, a world filled with the present and shadowed with the future.

Yours is the world of youth.

Your eyes, like newly melted streams,
Open and split the night's strong seams.
There is universal day in the world
And sundrops like thunderbolts are hurled.
The pause of the people, revelling in peace,
Life begins again and death must cease.
Like gentle water your tears wash the earth
And the eternal funeral is frozen to eternal birth.

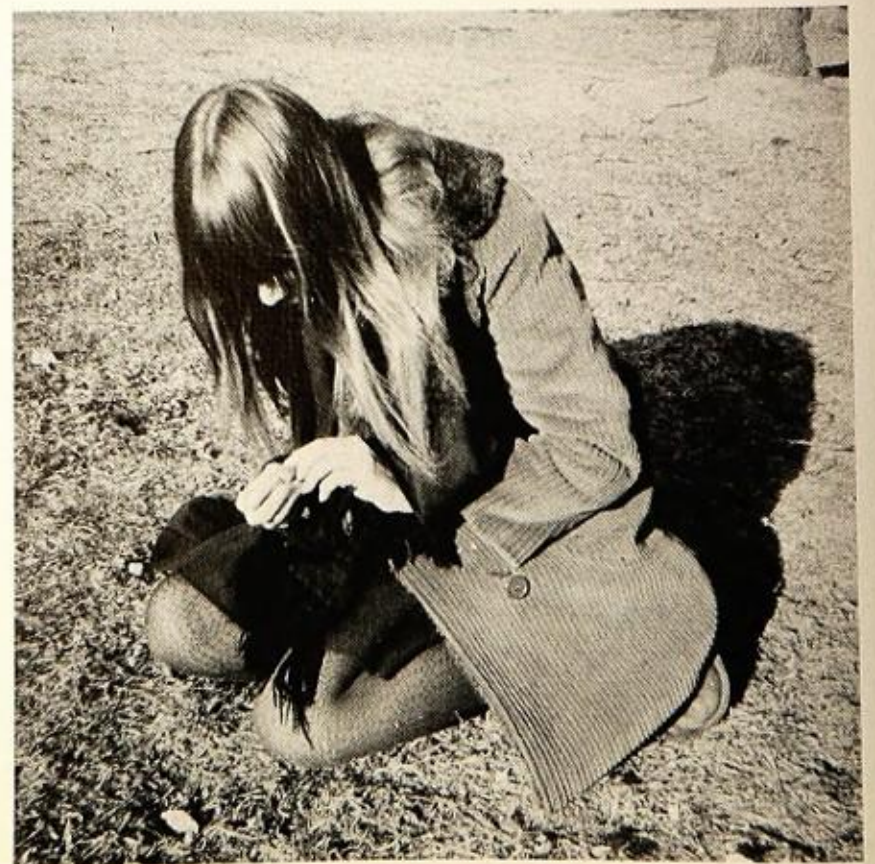

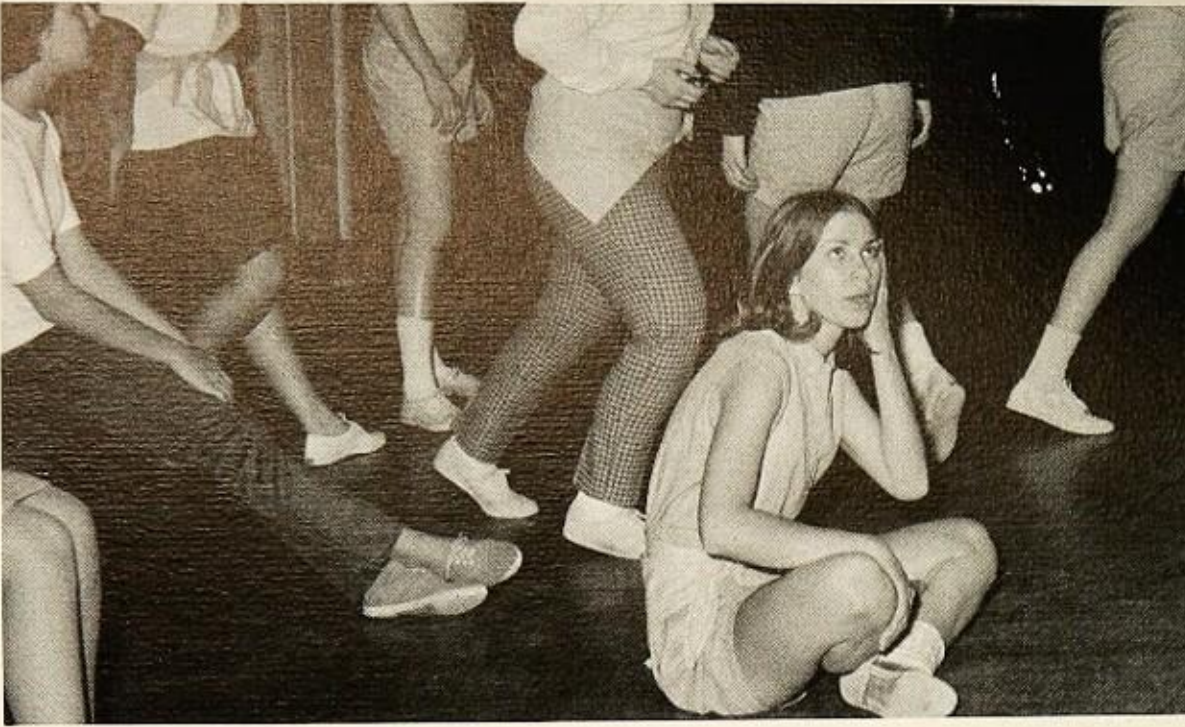

You've dropped like silver from the sky
From miles of dark, warm night,
To huddle in this cold circle of light;
You, the Orpheus risen from the sod,
The progeny of some ancient, dead god,
You alone can coax fire into the sky.
With the naked power of your soul
You can banish the curse of cold.

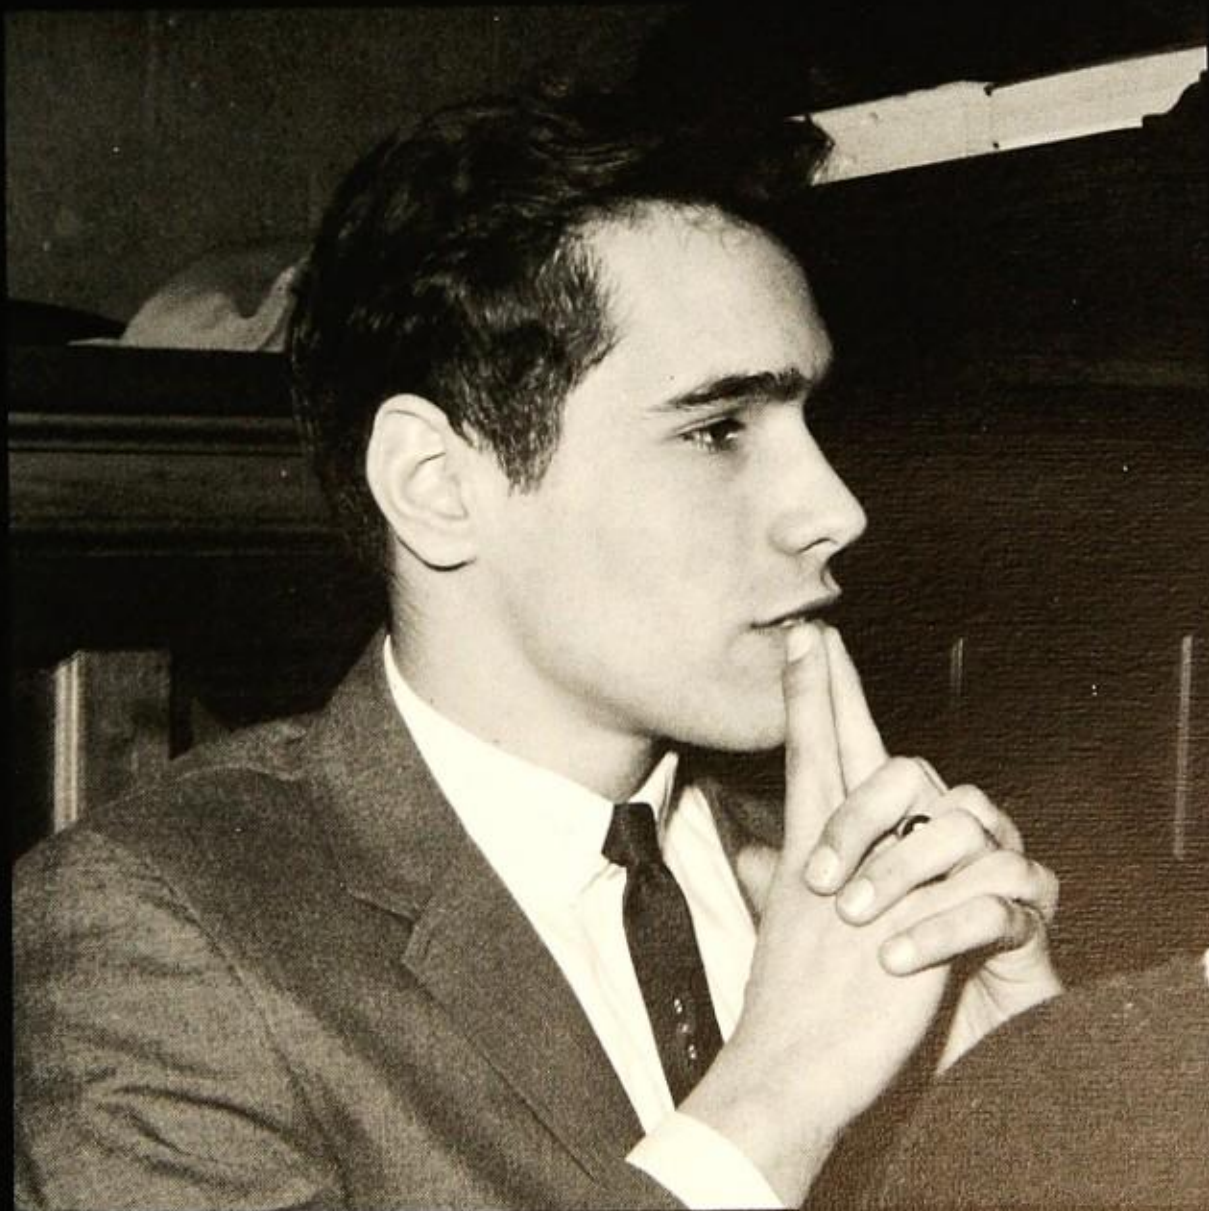

Why to this world, wonderful child?
Why to this howling rag-grown wild?
The dawn of your being born into despair,
The dawn of sunlight on your hair,
A moan of surrender and helpless hope
Rises from the world's thought-strangled throat,
And it waits to watch, waits to learn.
In a purple sky an orange sun begins to burn.

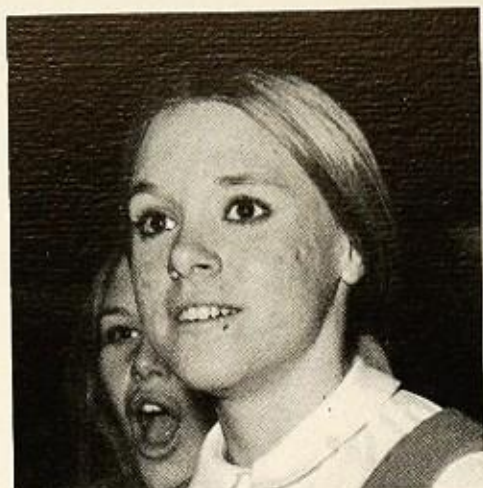

You are weaving webs of wonder
Around a sky that screams with thunder,
Around a lion that roars with hate,
Around a gypsy who sobs of fate,
Around the guns and swords and knives,
Around the jagged ugly lives;
Like a caterpillar' crysalis soon to become
A butterfly stumbling into the sun.

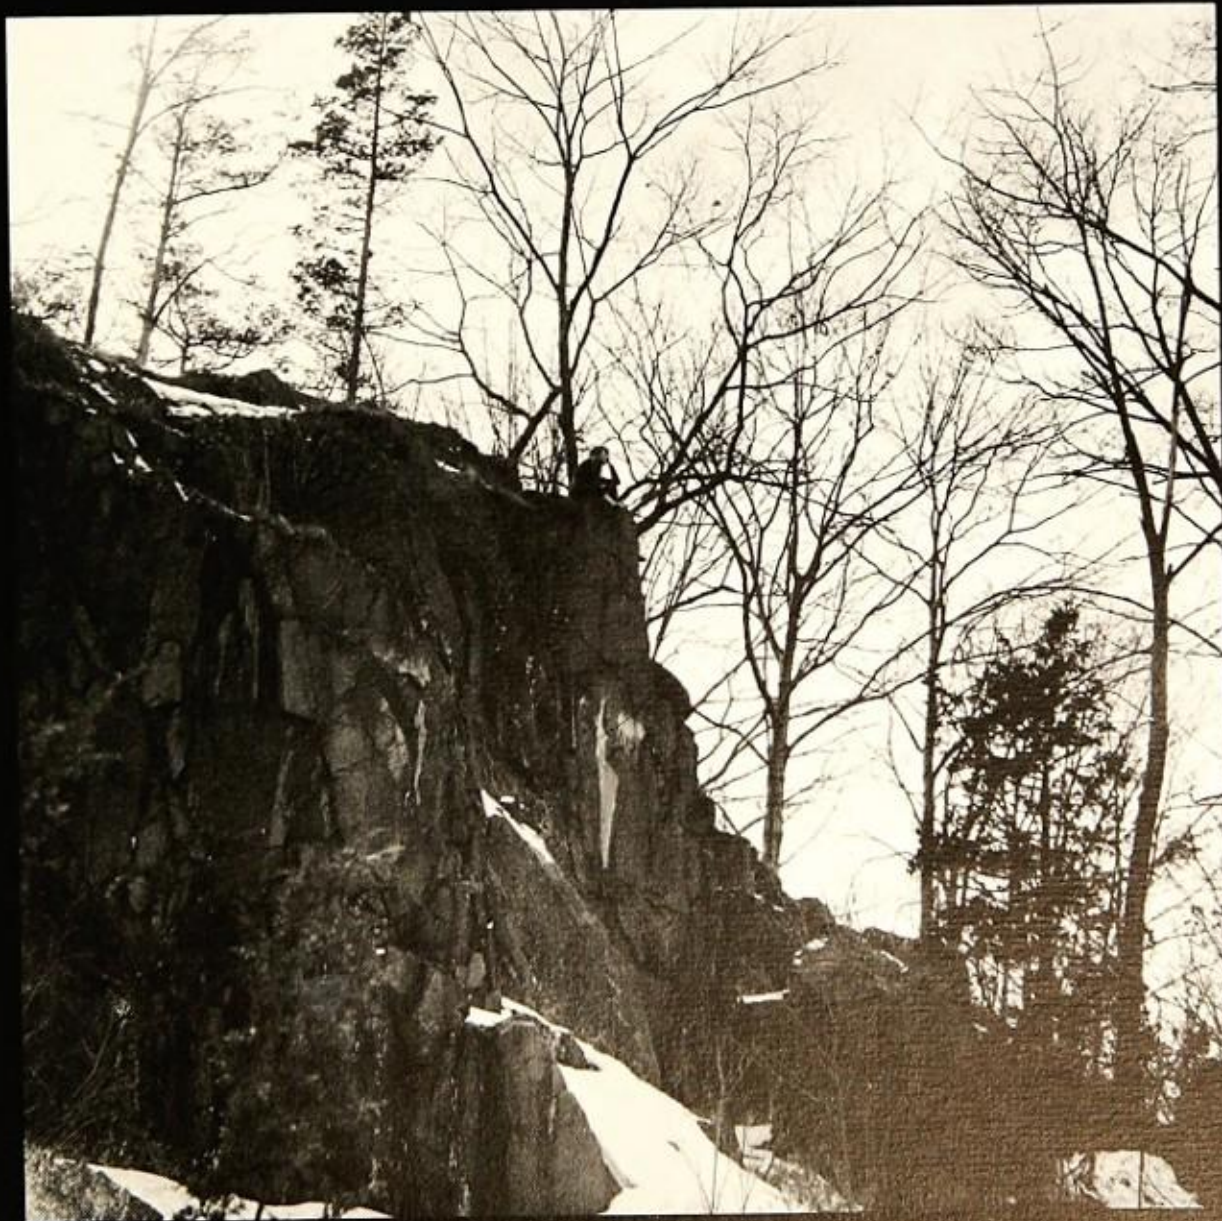

Delirious, you dance in the sun,
Aware that your life has begun,
Knowing that your feet have wings,
That your throat has a song that sings
Into the suns of your self a vow,
That your body's blood is rising now,
Rising too fast, and maybe too high,
Skimming the earth and smashing the sky.

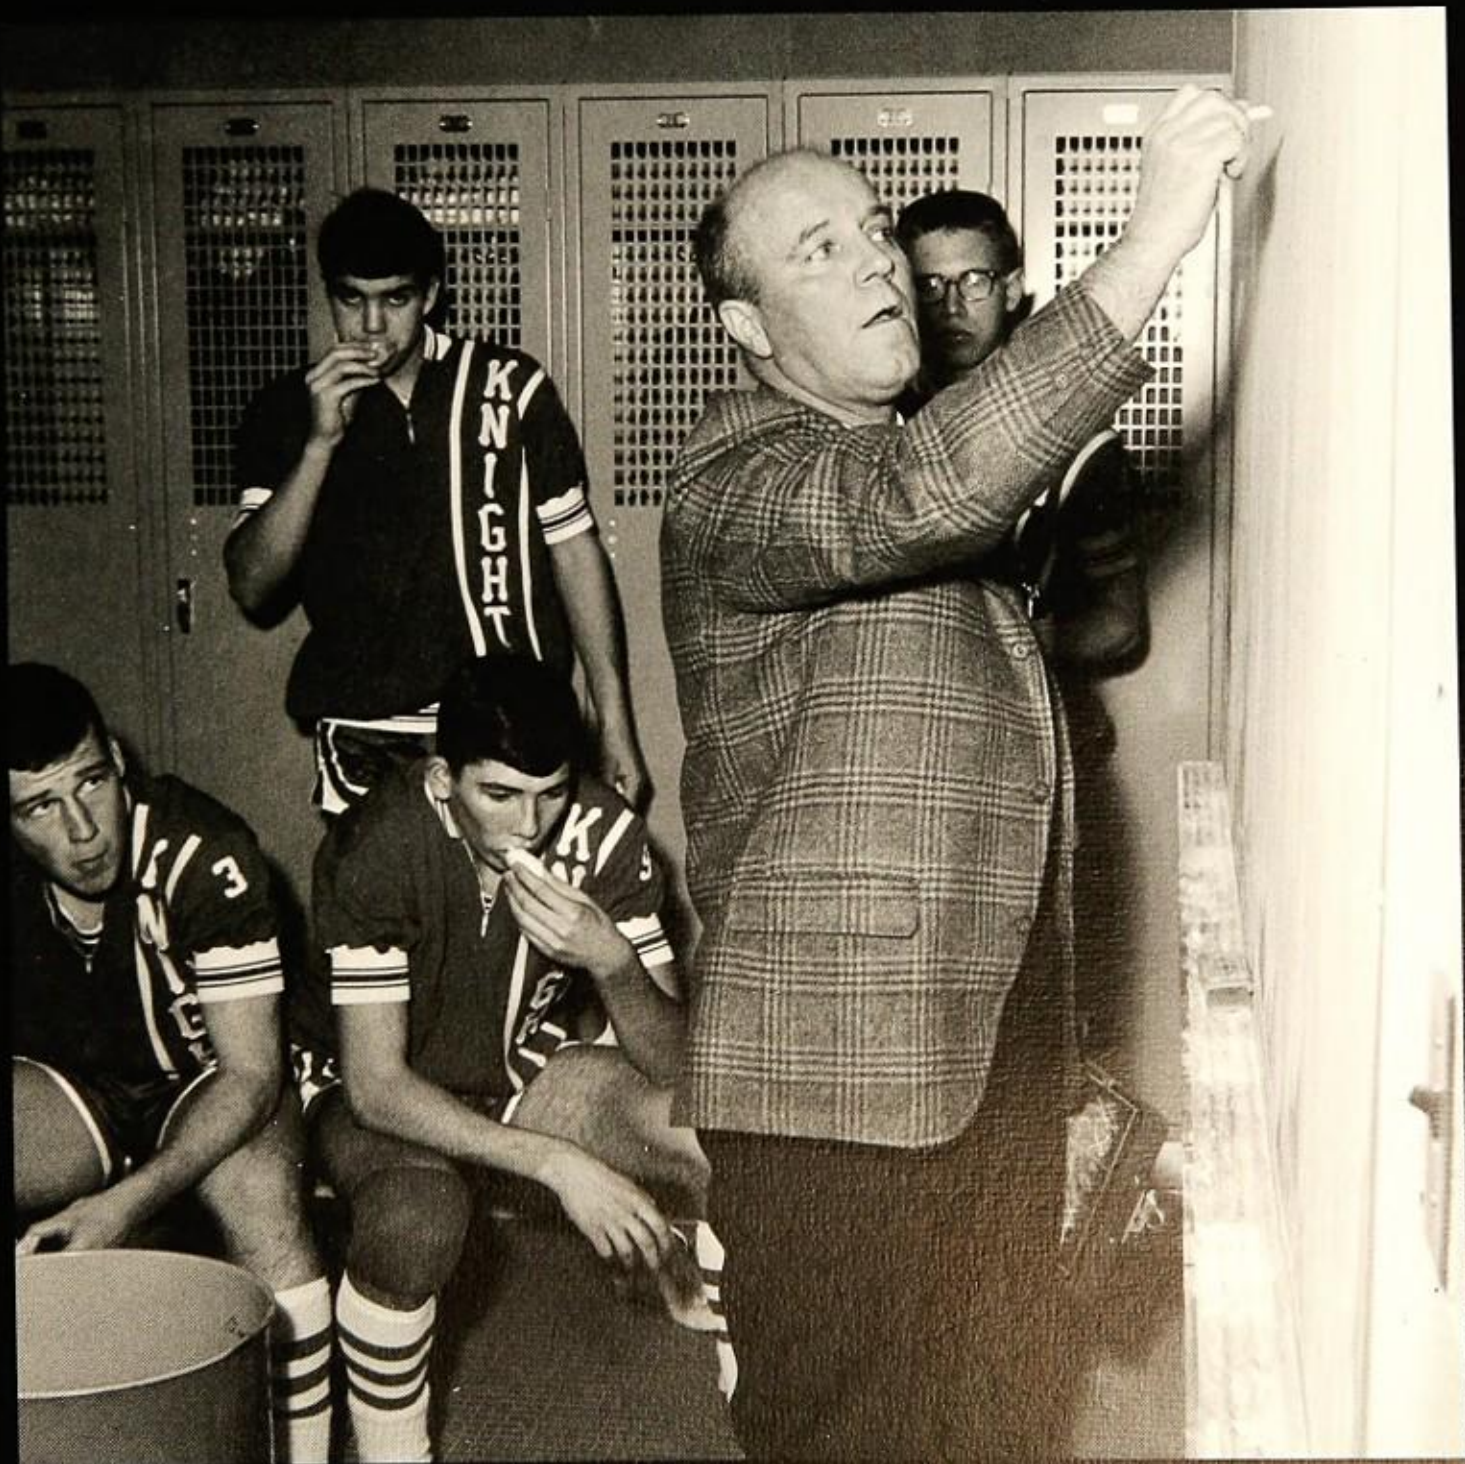

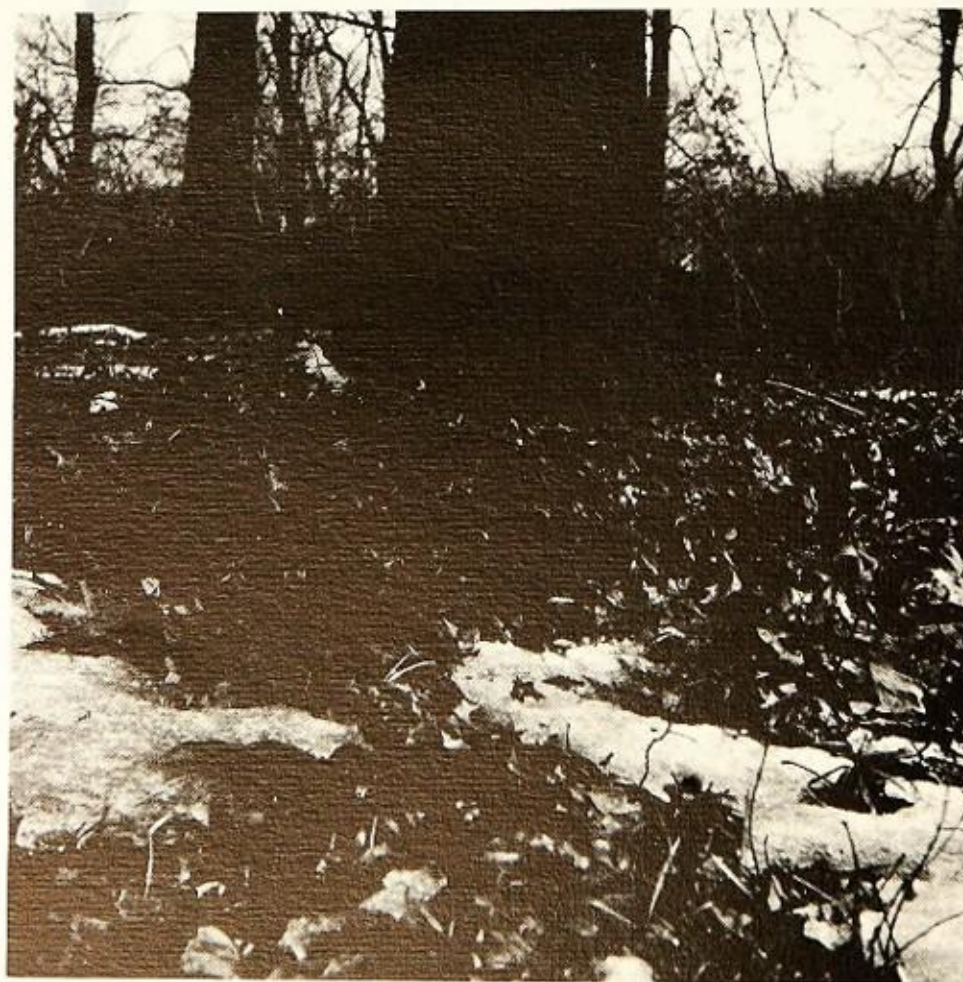

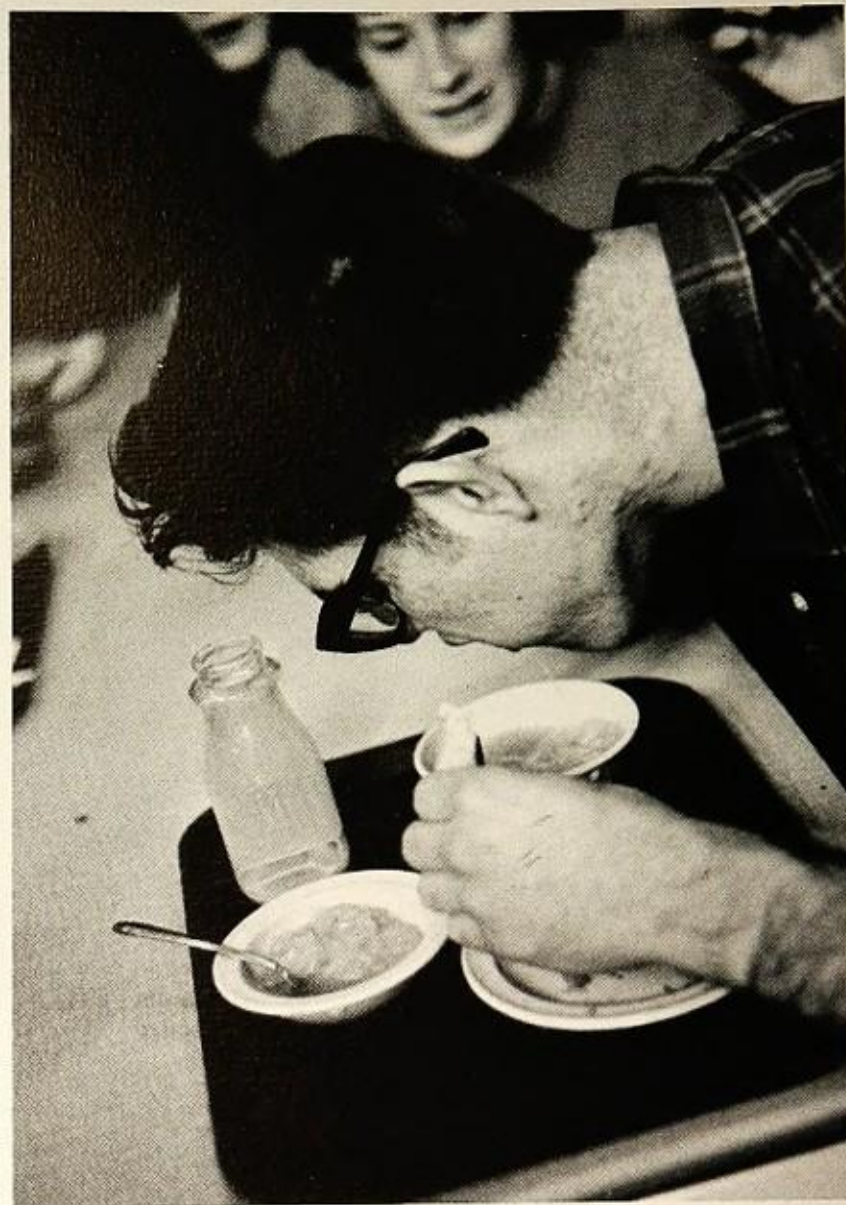

And you sing your silver throated song
In the dawns and twilights where you belong.
You sow the myriad seeds of your soul
On all the wondering forests of the world,
On rocks or mountains, fertile or bare,
On the accepting breast of the morning air;
Scattering your breathless fistfuls of light,
Staggering the limited irises of sight.

You recreated the world at your birth
And you own the skys, the seas, the earth.
All the eternity held in an hour,
All the infinity trapped in a flower
Become the limits of your being,
The boundaries of the world you're seeing.
The magic of creation has once more begun
Never to end until all is done.

Like a legacy, the gift has been passed—
The waterfalls, the teardrops, and the rainbows,
Everything that any man knows,
The gift of a song still unsung
Has been inherited by the very young
And will remain in their hands until
The final dark dawn when birds will be still
And the world will be in rest at last.

It really makes sense! Our Full Service Bank is a good "basket" for every financial "egg."
